Newsletter. This is issue marks the 5th year of my new Collectors Newsletter.

I am so happy to say that I am painting again. I had been worried about what I was going to do to keep myself occupied through the winter as I cannot do the outdoor work that I enjoy doing in the other seasons. But I have found a way to support my arm and wrist that gives me the control that I need to get the fine detail in my paintings. This newsletter includes a number of my recent paintings so you will see what I have been able to create this fall.

In this issue you will find the latest updates on Red Oak II renovations, my story of Otis' Cabin, a preview of a new building we are hoping to relocate to Red Oak II and several articles on one of my favorite subjects, crows. Also there are articles on my recent and past paintings, Dalton Gang book, 2011 art calendar and several of my figurines.

Greetings from Lowell

Greetings, my friends!

It seems like the fall just flew by this year and it's my favorite time to again bring you another issue of my Collectors

Brian Tearne is the winner of my 2010 Q4 Collectors Quiz. Brian is our first winner from Canada! His prize is a Lowell Davis "Pigeon" egg holder distributed by Schmid. Be sure to try your hand at the 2011 Q1 quiz.

If you or someone else that you know is not on the list to receive my newsletter and, please send us an email: lowelldaviscollectors@att.net. You can view and download all issues of my newsletter at: www.redoakiimissouri.com.

I hope you will visit Red Oak II sometime in 2011.

Red Oak II Updates

After a very busy summer of renovation work at Red Oak II, things slowed down in the fall as the weather was less favorable for outdoor work:

New Roof on the Mule Barn

The mule barn at Red Oak II has a brand spanking new wooden shingle roof on it.

New wood shingle roof on Mule Barn

Lowell provided the following story behind the Red Oak II mule barn.

“The mule barn was donated to Red Oak II by the Sarcoxie Flower Nursery. The Sarcoxie Flower Nursery produces hundreds of acres of peonies, gladiolas and irises and ships them all over the United States. The nursery had used mules instead of horses to cultivate between the rows of flowers because mules are very sure footed and stay in the aisles between the rows of plants, not trampling the flowers. Horses, on the other hand, would not follow the aisles and end up trampling the flowers. When the nursery switched from mules to tractors, they no longer needed the mule barn and donated it to Red Oak II.”

Lowell says thanks to Lois and Larry Frickenschmidt for putting a new roof on the Red Oak II mule barn which should save it for another 30 years.

Frank Stafford's Radiator Repair Shop

Before the weather turned cold, we did get the slab poured for the Radiator Repair Shop which will be on the service road behind the Red Oak II General Store.

We will move the building in in the spring when the weather improves.

We continue to explore the history of this building by talking to locals and researching records. We had confirmation from Jim French who at one time was the owner of tire store at the corner of South Fulton and East Central (MO 96) in Carthage. He recalls this being a radiator repair shop on South Fulton and that it had a forge. At that time there was a one pump service station on the corner.

Otis' Cabin

(formerly the Mother-In-Law's House)

Almost all of the buildings at Red Oak II were moved in from other locations and restored on site except for the Mother-In-Law's House and Marshall Hookers Office which were newly designed and created by Lowell Davis. Lowell related the following story about the Mother-In-Law's House.

Back in the 1980's when the houses at Red Oak II were being used as Bed and Breakfasts, the furniture and decorations in the houses were all in their original period. When guests would come to spend a weekend in one of the Bed and Breakfasts and bring their mother-in-law with them, being as the Mother-In-Law's House had a drawbridge to get to it, they could put her in the Mother-In-Law's House, run the drawbridge up and enjoy their weekend.

In more recent times, the Mother-In-Law's House has been repainted to be a rustic cabin and Lowell has renamed it as Otis' Cabin after Otis the bull frog that lives in the pond which surrounds the cabin.

Otis' Cabin

This is a very popular and one of the most photographed buildings at Red Oak II. Be sure to check it out when you visit Red Oak II next time and say "Hi" to Otis.

New Building for Red Oak II

One of Lowell's favorite breakfast spots is Judy's in Jasper MO. On the way to Judy's, Lowell likes to take the county roads and often passes a charming, abandoned farm house on Baseline Road to the North of Red Oak II.

Abandoned Farm House on Baseline Road

Lowell has often thought that this farm house would make a nice addition to Red Oak II and we have begun exploring the possibility. As you can see from the photo, the exterior is weathered but the building appears to be quite sound structurally. What Lowell is thinking about doing is preparing a foundation for the building, moving the building to Red Oak II and making it available for someone to restore for their own use. Interested?

The Crow's Funeral

A good majority of Lowell's paintings are based on his life experiences, things in his growing up years or about happenings out of his back door. He feels when an artist paints his/her life, the paintings have soul. To demonstrate this, he related the following story behind his painting, The Crow's Funeral.

"One winter day my dad and I were walking through the woods. The fresh snow on the ground made had turned the woods into a winter wonderland. As we were walking, my dad stuck his hand in his coat pocket and pulled out an old black rag saying "Son, do you know what a crow's funeral is?" My reply was "No, I don't." With that he put the black rag under a big sycamore tree and then we hid and watched. With the use of his hands, my dad called like a crow which attracted a single crow to the big sycamore tree. The crow thought the black rag was a dead crow and started cawing and carrying on which attracted every crow in a ten mile radius. They flew in from every direction filling the big sycamore tree.

The Crow's Funeral by Lowell Davis

You never heard such goings on and commotion as they were stirring up. This seemed to go on for ten to fifteen minutes, then they all quit and flew off in different directions. When the air became silent again, my dad and I came out of hiding and dad walked over to the big sycamore tree and picked up his black rag, replacing it in his coat pocket. He turned to me and said "Now son, that was a crow's funeral".

More Crows by Lowell Davis

After getting his 1997 crow painting, "Grandma's Slow but then She's Old" back (see the article in the previous issue of this newsletter), Lowell's creative genius started flowing around the subject of crows and he was inspired to produce a series of four paintings featuring crows.

The first one he did is "The Thief" which features a crow holding a watch chain in its beak with a stash of other stolen treasures in a tree trunk:

His next one is a self-portrait with a crow sitting on his shoulder whispering to him entitled “The Secret”:

We asked Lowell what secret the crow had shared with him but he said he could not say as “It was a secret!”

The third painting is a panorama with Lowell in Emery coming down the road one winter day and encountering a flock of crows that were on the road cleaning up a “Road Kill”:

The fourth painting, the one that Lowell feels is the best of the four, is “Wrong Neighborhood”, in which an owl is being chased out of the neighborhood by a flock of crows:

Lowell has found a way to support his arm and wrist that allows him to achieve the detail in his recent paintings.

We have scanned in and will be making Giclée prints available of The Thief, The Secret and Wrong Neighborhood.

Lowell's New Paintings

Lowell's "Grandma's Slow but then She's Old" which featured the four crow's playing Rook also inspired him to do two additional paintings with birds playing card games.

The first of these paintings features four seabirds playing Go Fish. Lowell entitled this painting "The One That Got Away" as the seabirds are telling fish stories to one another as they play cards. Just look at the incredible amount of detail that Lowell put into this painting. It was interesting to watch as Lowell moved across the painting adding the detail.

The One That Got Away by Lowell Davis (2010)

For his second painting, Lowell was inspired by a sketch that he had done of four chickens playing Old Maid. This painting also includes an incredible amount of detail.

16" X 20" Giclée prints on canvas of both of these paintings will be available for purchase.

Lowell feels that Giclée prints of these two paintings would look great on a wall along with Giclée prints of his prior paintings:

Early Lowell Davis Paintings

We came across some of Lowell's paintings from the past that we wanted to share with his collectors and friends.

The first of these was a painting that Lowell did when he was in the seventh grade.

As you can see Lowell had great talent back in his teenage years.

The second painting hangs in Lowell's studio. When he was in Texas, he did a number of paintings under the name Marchant. This one is an excellent rendition of Sherlock Holmes.

The third painting we discovered hanging at Lowell's cabin. Lowell says he painted this one on his honeymoon with Charlotte in April 1974 at Newburn Oregon.

The Dalton Gang, Up to Their Old Antics

Lowell wrote the Forward for his new book "The Dalton Gang, Up to Their Old Antics", in December and we have incorporated it into the book. We have produced a proof CD-ROM which Lowell is reviewing. We are still wrestling with whether or not we should do a paper version of the book as well as the eBook as there are some people that prefer that medium. Due to the large number of pages and color images a paper book would be quite expensive. We plan to do a poll to see what the preferred format is for the new book.

2011 Lowell Davis Art Calendar

As an introduction to Lowell's upcoming new book "The Dalton Gang, Up to Their Old Antics", we selected 13 of the awesome paintings that Lowell did for his book to create the 2011 Lowell Davis Art Calendar.

We worked to keep a reasonable cost for the calendars while still maintaining the high quality that we have had in previous calendars. You can order your copy from our online store:

Featured Lowell Davis Figurines

Lowell suggested we feature a couple of figurines in each issue of the newsletter. This month we feature a couple of the Country Christmas figurines produced by Border Fine Arts. We are including Lowell's story behind each of the figurines from the story cards that came with the figurines. It is these story cards that accompanied the figurines that helped make them so popular with collectors.

Blossom's Gift – 1987 Country Christmas

It was a cold, snowy Christmas Eve when our dog, Hooker, broke the silence with a dozzie of a barking spell. I went out to the barn to see what all the ruckus was about. All the animals gathered 'round to see too. Low and behold, Blossom, the cow, has just given birth to a little girl calf. Well, now there was a new family member to name! "I know!" said Pearl, the sheep, to all the other animals. "My ancestors were at a manger just like this one, a long, long time ago. The Christ Child was born this very night, under a bright star that shone in the heaven. And since the baby calf has a star on her forehead, maybe we should name her STAR." They all agreed that it was the perfect name for the little calf...born on Christmas Eve.

Cutting the Family Christmas Tree – 1988 Country Christmas

Every year, the choppin' of the Christmas tree is a big event. I always pick an especially clear, cold night. Then I sort of surprise the kids and say, "Hey, I figure it's about time to go find our tree!" They get all excited and bundle up in a hurry. We rig up Old Garfield the goat to a sled and set out to the woods out back of Fox Fire Farm. And while I'm out with Jeb, Wren, and Hooker our dog, Miss Charlotte's back at the Farm fixin' up some hot cider and layin' out the decorations. Then, on the way back to the farm we talk about how this will be the finest Christmas ever.
